Let's talk about hard days?

Hard days happen and we can't run away from them. There's no way to stop them and, for that, the best we can do is learn to recognise them, understand how they make us feel, accept them and normalise them, as they are part of us and our story. This is a tender and moving book for everyone – children e grown-ups – to help deal with the harder days and the feelings that come with them.

The cloud factory

Mr. Manuel worked at the Cloud Factory all his life, committed to making clouds with love, up until the factory's Director replaced him with a machine that made clouds way faster. The clouds, however, started to come out looking all the same... and the children stopped looking at the sky. Sad, though hopeful, Mr. Manuel started making his own clouds from home. Will he be able to help the kids look at the sky once again?

Your wings

This book is a love letter written by a mother to her daughter, who has Down Syndrome. It's a tribute that comes from a mother who, despite all the criticism, never hid the fact that her daughter was different and that always taught her to be free and fly so she could follow every single dream of hers. This book is also a lesson to all of us. Despite the roadblocks we might face, we can all fly, each with our own pair of wings and in our own way.

ABOUT US

ZERO A OITO was founded in 1999, in Lisbon, and since then has earned an important place in the Portuguese publishing world.

We started as a company specializing in children's content but in 2016 we extended our target to both middle grade and adult audiences.

Acting with determination in three major areas – books, magazines and custom publishing – ZERO A OITO features a wide range of products and projects for its readers. We put a lot of creativity, love and commitment into all of our projects and our mission is to show that books are best friends for life and they can keep you company at all times.

Happy reading!
